Catalyst

In chemistry, a catalyst is a substance that participates in a chemical reaction without being one of the chemicals either used up or produced. For instance, chemical A might mix with chemical B to form chemical C. However, if you inserted the catalyst, the same reaction would occur, just at a much faster rate. Catalysts act by making the conditions more favorable (better environment, bringing molecules closer, etc) for the reaction. In biology, most enzymes are catalysts.

How does this relate to our training? A certain technique could act as a catalyst by causing everything else to fall into place. For instance, adding a back kick to your sparring game could stop your partner from rushing in to you. That would enable you to set the tempo of the match, conserve your energy, and keep your partner off guard.

Certain players often act as catalysts in team sports. For instance, one player might join the team and get one gold medal. But if he causes everyone around him to work harder, then his value to the team will be much more than the one medal he wins. One person can often fire a team up and inspire them. These people act as catalysts for their team.

To Do:

Name a player who has had a catalytic effect on a team you are on:

What was it about this person that caused the rest of the team to change into something better?
